

Relaxation

Relaxation is an important error process in quantum computers. Relaxation occurs because in real implementations computational states have slightly different energies. Because everything in nature wants to be in the lowest possible energy, sometimes a computational state will relax into the wrong state therefore causing an error.