

Sign flips

Quantum computers need to be protected against more than just classical bit flips. Quantum information can also be affected by what are called sign flips. These can be thought of as “bit flip, but sideways’. Our repetition code example can be modified to protect against sign flips, but to protect against bit flips and sign flips at the same time we need more sophisticated techniques. These techniques are studied in the field of quantum error correction.